

A fly-eating iguana

adorns a carpet by Timorous Beasties, part of a series of nine designs to be shown at Milan in a collection called First Weave. It's the first time the Scottish textile design duo has created carpets, which in this case are made from wool and nylon and will be put into production by British manufacturer Brintons. The designs include a sketch of a giant thistle and a twee floral pattern, subverted by elements such as moths and iguanas.
